TEACHING ASSISTANTS

REQUIRED FOR

2016 PROGRAM OF LEGAL STUDIES FOR NATIVE PEOPLE

Teaching assistant duties in the Program of Legal Studies for Native People (PLSNP) include: offering tutorial sessions to assist students in developing the skills required for success in law school; working with students one-on-one to assist them in skills development and in understanding basic principles of law; assisting faculty; helping students plan social and cultural events; and some administrative duties. Evening and weekend work is required.

Teaching assistants must be available for work from May 10 to July 20, 2016. Teaching assistants who elect to work for the full summer will be offered full-time employment from May 1 until August 31. Duties before and after the PLSNP will be related to Aboriginal law or legal education.

Ideally, applicants should be completing second or third year law. Applicants should have a good understanding of the function and purpose of the PLSNP. Preference will be given to applicants who are graduates of the PLSNP. (General PLSNP information is available at: <http://www.usask.ca/plsnp/>)

The salary range is approximately $2575 per month, based on the university's student assistant pay scale, which is reviewed in the spring. Any change to the scale will be reflected in the salary paid to teaching assistants.

For further information call (306) 966-6189. The deadline for applications is March 1, 2016. A letter of application, accompanied by a resume, transcripts and three letters from academic references should be sent as soon as possible to:
