Lenora Ledwon has her JD from the University of Michigan Law School and her PhD in English Literature from the University of Notre Dame. Her book, Law and Literature: Text and Theory, surveys the theoretical perspectives that inform the relationship between law and literature and illustrates the importance of narrative in shaping our understanding of law. Professor Ledwon has published in a wide variety of journals, including: Literature/Film Quarterly; Victorian Literature & Culture; Harvard Women's Law Journal; Yale Journal of Law and Feminism; William & Mary Journal of Women and the Law; Temple Law Review; Studies in Law, Politics and Society; American Indian Quarterly; Journal of Animal & Environmental Law; and Drake Law Review, among others. She is co-editor of the casebook, Law and Popular Culture: Text, Notes, and Questions (2nd ed.). Professor Ledwon teaches courses in Evidence, Contracts, Law and Literature, and Legal Storytelling.
